Tenure Track Position - Health Promotion
Faculty of Kinesiology & Health Studies, University of Regina

The Faculty of Kinesiology and Health Studies at the University of Regina is recruiting an enthusiastic and collaborative academic leader with expertise and experience in the promotion of health and/or physical activity so as to enable communities or individuals to enhance their own health and/or levels of physical activity. This tenure track Assistant Professor position in our Health Promotion program of study will begin August 1, 2019.

Candidates for the position will have earned a PhD in a relevant discipline (e.g., Health Promotion, Kinesiology, Health Studies, Public Health, etc.). PhD candidates, with evidence of completion by date of appointment, are welcome to apply. Post-doctoral work is an asset.

Our future colleague will provide evidence of being able to develop a viable research agenda related to health promotion. Work that includes the promotion of health and/or physical activity among Indigenous peoples, or seeks a better understanding of health promotion and health issues within Indigenous populations would be considered an asset. Demonstrated ability to establish an active research profile that includes research publications, honours/graduate student mentorship, and securing external funding through national granting agencies, contracts, and/or other funding sources is a requirement of the position. The Faculty of Kinesiology and Health Studies prides itself on its collaborative approach to research; ability and willingness to work with others is important. In the letter of application, candidates should make certain to highlight potential research collaboration(s) with current faculty members, or others at the University.

The successful candidate’s training, background, and/or program of research will demonstrate the ability to teach a number of courses in the undergraduate program, specifically in the Health Promotion major. The capacity to make contributions to graduate teaching is valued. Previous experience developing and teaching one or more university face-to-face or online courses is considered an asset. An overview of which Faculty of KHS undergraduate program courses (and any additional relevant courses) the candidate would be prepared to deliver as part of their teaching responsibilities should also be included in the letter of application.

The Faculty of Kinesiology and Health Studies at the University of Regina is a growing and dynamic community whose mission is to enhance the wellbeing of students, colleagues, and community members through quality education, innovative research, top-tier athletics, and diverse community programming. Our vision is to inspire learning, leadership, and excellence for strong, healthy communities. The Faculty prides itself on its collaborative approach to research and teaching; the ability and willingness to work with others is important.

Academically, the Faculty offers a variety of undergraduate and graduate degree programs to over 800 students. Administratively, we are responsible for the delivery of recreation, leisure, and athletics for the University community. In addition, the Faculty provides health and wellness related services and programming for communities on and off campus. The Faculty operates out of a facility of more 15,000 sq. m that houses an aquatic centre, five gymnasiums, a dance studio, fitness facilities, an indoor track, laboratory space, as well as classrooms and meeting space.

The University of Regina is a comprehensive university of over 15,000 students committed to excellence in teaching, research, and service. We are located in Regina, Saskatchewan, a city of about 220,000 with vibrant sport, arts, and cultural communities and home to one of the largest urban parks in Canada.

The University of Regina is committed to an inclusive workplace that reflects the richness of the community that we serve. The University welcomes applications from all qualified individuals, including individuals within the University's employment equity categories of women, persons with disabilities, members of visible minorities, Indigenous persons, individuals of diverse gender and sexual orientation and all groups protected by the Human Rights Code however, qualified persons who self-identify as being of Indigenous ancestry will be given priority.

Applications are encouraged from all qualified candidates but priority will be given for Canadians and Permanent Residents.

Applications must be submitted via the University’s Careers portal: http://www.uregina.ca/hr/careers/opportunities.html. More information about the position, along with details of the application requirements, is provided online.

Review of applications will begin December 15, 2018, however the position will remain open until filled.

Any questions about the position should be directed to the Dean, Harold Riemer, at: KHS.Dean@uregina.ca